Penlson, 1 Ves. B. 272, per Lord Eldon. Eq.jur.--13 to a person without consideration, the use at once resulted to th2 feoffor, and in equity he continued to enjoy the beneficial interest. It was therefore at one time held in England that, on a voluntary conveyance to a stranger, a trust would result to the grantor when no intention appeared to confer a beneficial interest on the grantee.1 This doctrine, however, never applied to conveyances to a wife or child, but an intention to make an advancement was presumed, and the wife or child took beneficially.128 Under the system of conveyances in force in the United States, where land is conveyed to the use of the grantee, no use can, of course, result to the grantor, though the conveyance is voluntary;139 and especially...
