Tis not a cheek, a lip, an eye, But tis the soul that lights them all. For that I drop the tender tear, For that I make this artless moan; Oh! sigh it, Love, into her ear, And make the bashful lover known. I (lo not think that in giving general circulation to a poem like this, and the following Commemoration of Congreve, I am adding only to the bulk of Thomson s writings--oppressing with weight, and with weight only, the neat pyramid of white marble he had erected for himself. I could swell this publication with other poems by Thomson equally genuine, but they would rather detract from than add to his well-earned and high reputation--supplying quantity rather than quality. Among the more curious minutiae of the poet s life, well enough known in his own day, but lost in our own,...
