Excerpt: .beyond hazarding that conjecture am unable to assist you with a surmise. The Prime Minister since he kissed hands, has wisely given us no inkling, .or pen and inkling, of his policy; and the time that ha s elapsed since he was cheered by the far-seeing crowd on the railway platform at Windsor has been insufficient for the preparation of, any important measures--unless with a sure foresight of.recent events, he nas employed his leisure, in the recess, in devising such schemes as 1 ill satisfy the nation , delight the Party of which he, is the.leader, d confirm the allegiance of the Licensed Victuallers!, the ruraj Clergy, and the Retail Tradesmen. Fortunately, the prospect of a. Session of tranquil repose cannot be repugnant to a House of Commons, the majority of whose Members orte their Parliamentary being to constituencies which appear W be wcarj; of the ferment 01 legislative activity, and to desire a season of political hibernation. Looking, however, a little into the future, it is not impossible that great surprises may be in store for us all. Her Majesty s Ministers may before long resolve that the time has come when the Established Church of England and Wales must submit to some diminution of her powers, privileges, and emoluments; that the Game Laws are a barbarous relic of feudal times.calling for instant abolition; that a bold and comprehensive measure.foe, -, the Municipal Government of the entire.Metropolis has been 190 lirag neglected and...
