Some cities, we all know, are laid out more regularly than others, most of our American cities aiming at great uniformity, one series of parallel streets being crossed at right angles by another series of parallel streets. While such regularity, or the absence of it, is a thing immediately obvious to the most careless observer, there is another respect in which cities differ from each other which is important, but not so obvious, indeed is very generally lost sight of, and only a few people who have studied the maps, and have done some measuring and figuring, know anything about it. And that is the wastefulness or economy of space with which a city is laid out, the shape...
